What is an Air Source Heat Pump?

An air source heat pump is a low-carbon way of heating your home. It is more energy efficient as the pump uses less electrical energy than the heat it produces.

The heat pump works by absorbing heat from the outside air into a liquid refrigerant at a low temperature. Using electricity, the pump compresses the liquid to increase its temperature. It is then condensed back into a liquid in order to release the stored heat. The heat is then sent to your radiator heating system.

Any unused heat is stored in the hot water cylinder. This hot water will also provide hot baths and showers.

Benefits of Heat Pumps

Low carbon emissions

Less maintenance than combustion heating systems

Longer life than combustion systems

Heat pumps deliver more heat energy than the electrical energy they consume so a heat pump system typically costs less than a traditional heating system
